In 2014, Foundation Center again partnered with the Georgia Grantmakers Alliance and the Georgia Center for Nonprofits to assess current trends in giving by the state's foundations and to further examine the relationship between Georgia's foundations and nonprofits. Separate surveys were conducted of Georgia Grantmakers Alliance and Georgia Center for Nonprofits members, with a total of 61 grantmaking foundations and 426 nonprofits submitting responses. This report includes selected findings from these surveys, along with key statistics on Georgia funders, in order to present a current picture of the state's foundations and their grantmaking practices.

Growth in the Number of Foundations

Since 2000

Despite several economic downturns and the emergence of a range of alternative giving vehicles, the number of grantmaking foundations in Georgia has increased by about a third since 2000. The rapid rate of growth for foundations during the late 1990s was curbed slightly by the downturn experienced in the early 2000s and then again, much more noticeably, during the 2007-2009 recession. Between 2008 and 2010, the number of foundations in Georgia and the Southeast declined slightly, but both have since recovered and surpassed pre-recession levels.

Foundation Giving & Nonprofit Needs

Georgia Foundation Giving

by Major Subject, 2012

Education received the largest share of grant dollars awarded by Georgia foundations in Foundation Center's 2012 grants sample. The largest grant in this category was a $50 million endowment provided by the Robert W. Woodruff Foundation to Emory University to grow and enhance the Woodruff Scholars Program in Emory College. Human services continued to be the recipient of the largest number of grants, although most awards in this category were smaller in size. Following a number of multi-million dollar grants awarded to Grady Health System from 2009-2011, the share of funding for health fell to just over 8 percent in 2012.

Georgia Nonprofits' Reliance on Foundation Grants

When asked to report the percentage of their annual income received from foundations, more than three quarters of nonprofit survey respondents stated that less than 30 percent of their funding came in the form of private grants. This reflects national trends, where foundation giving accounted for just 12.9 percent of income for U.S. nonprofit sector organizations in 2012.¹ Although one of many potential sources of revenue, foundation grants remain an important source of funding for nonprofits, especially for program development and capital support.

Funding Needs

by Type of Support

In their respective surveys, both grantmakers and nonprofits were asked to rank the importance of specified types of support in meeting the needs of Georgia's nonprofit sector. For most categories, the average responses from grantmaker and nonprofit respondents were closely aligned, suggesting that the two groups share similar funding priorities. As a whole, nonprofit respondents ranked support for new programs and initiatives slightly higher, while grantmakers showed greater interest in support for advocacy and for debt relief.

A total of 327 nonprofits provided responses regarding their reliance on foundation grants. A total of 313 nonprofits and 61 grantmakers provided information on anticipated funding needs.

Top 5 Leading Priority Issues for Georgia Foundations

1. Secondary & Primary Education Effectiveness
2. Early Childhood Education Availability & Quality
3. Healthcare Access & Affordability
4. Child Welfare
5. Higher Education Access & Affordability

Respondents to the Georgia Grantmakers Alliance survey were asked to rank a listing of community issue areas in order of urgency. Education was a common theme among three out of the top five, and a fourth category, child welfare, was also directly related to improving opportunities for Georgia's children. Access to quality, affordable health care completed the listing of top issue areas. Job training and economic development were also highly-ranked, but fell just outside the top five.

Top 10 Challenges for Georgia Nonprofits

Funding and financial sustainability were key issues identified among the challenges anticipated by respondents to the Georgia Center for Nonprofits' member survey. The top concern shared by respondents was raising funds for general operating support. While some funders, including the Community Foundation for Greater Atlanta, have made general operating support a priority in recent years, this remains the leading challenge for the state's nonprofits.

Grantmaker-Grantee Communications

Nonprofit Perceptions of Grantmaker Communications

When asked to evaluate the overall communication practices of Georgia foundations, almost three quarters of respondents to the Georgia Center for Nonprofits survey rated the state's grantmakers as either very approachable or moderately approachable. Georgia grantmakers also received positive ratings more specifically for their communication of grantmaking priorities, application procedures, and funding decisions. Understandably, the one instance where respondents saw Georgia foundations as fairly unresponsive concerned grantmakers' reception of unsolicited proposals.

How Grantmakers Communicate with Grantees

Respondents to the Georgia Grantmakers Alliance survey identified email as the most frequently-used method of communicating with grantees or prospective grantees. This was closely followed by in-person meetings and telephone conversations, suggesting that direct personal interaction still plays a large part in building funding relationships. Written communication (i.e. letters) and use of the foundation's website completed the top five. Other methods of online communication, including e-newsletters and social media, were much less popular among grantmakers.

Grant Reporting Requirements

Nearly three quarters of foundations in the Georgia Grantmakers Alliance survey attested to having some type of written reporting requirement for grantees. Of those funders, the largest share (46 percent) indicated that grantees needed to submit reports annually. Another 16 percent required reports at the conclusion of a project, and 3 percent expected reports to be filed quarterly.
